Decision-maker's magazine
for packaging processes

PLASTVERARBEITER

What does sustainable packaging look like? Is it fiber-based or made of plastic, but then made of monomaterial to ensure recyclability? Or would you prefer biodegradable or even textile? How can the new, alternative packaging materials be processed efficiently and reliably on modern packaging machines? And finally: How does the packaging score at the point of sale and ensure an attractive appearance?

New materials, their use in everyday practice, the machinery compatibility of fiber-based packaging materials and the role of chemical recycling as a supplement to the mechanical process are just some of the aspects we highlight in our special topic on sustainable food packaging.

Key topics

- Packaging sorting in different European countries
- How can chemical recycling ensure a properly working circular economy?
- Biodegradable packaging concepts made from textiles
- Garden compostable wrapping film
- How can fiber-based packaging materials be processed optimally on a thermoforming machine?
- Sustainable packaging for fresh products made from chemically recycled polyamide
